What the press has to say:

“Rock, like many genres, has been historically dominated by white dudes. And rock, like many genres, is being reshaped by musicians of color and queer musicians. Natural Velvet, a punk-rock band based in Baltimore, is one of those bands wrecking the scene. On the heels of their latest album, Mirror to Make You, Natural Velvet spoke to Bitch about disrupting rock’s whiteness and heteronormativity, making space for female rage, and creating music for women.” — Evette Dionne, Bitch Magazine

“Guitars scream and twist like dancing banshees around a persistent bass slither. Corynne’s voice teeters in the maelstrom between a too-cool indifference and lilting waivers that bring to mind Lou Reed... if he were a woman... The songs move forward at their own pace, which might sound akin to a stagger down a long and dimly lit hallway. Whether it’s drawing inspiration from alien films or experimenting with feedback manipulation, the band members aren’t afraid to take chances.” – Zach Schepis, BreakThru Radio

“Call it music; call it art; call it whatever you want, but it fucking rules.” — Melissa Caruso and Kevin Korber, Elmore Magazine

“This Baltimore-based shoegaze four-piece is known for loudness and intensity, weaponizing intimate pop hooks with dark tones, piling on distortion and overdrive to make instruments sound like they’re being pushed to their limit.”—Nina Mashurova, Impose Magazine
